Invitation

In the context of the key role played by medicines development during this COVID-19 pandemic, this one-day online seminar will highlight COVID-19 as an example for innovations in therapy and prevention and discuss specific themes, chances and challenges related to the science and ethics of pharmaceutical medicine during public health emergencies.

A broad range of experts that come from a variety of professions and areas, and have been involved in the COVID-19 pandemic response, will highlight the innovate approaches to this outbreak by governments and international organizations, explain how to recognize patterns and monitoring of pandemic infections, discuss the clinical aspects of COVID-19, showcase the different treatment approaches (vaccines, antivirals and immune modulators) and point out regulatory aspects regarding pandemics and how health authorities are supporting an accelerated approval.

Please join us on September 10, 2020 to deep-dive into COVID-19 and to reflect, learn from and discuss with the experts the different responses to dealing with public health emergencies, such as the COVID-19 pandemic.
